How To Care for Stainless Steel

- Presoak to loosen dried-on foods, protect the flatware's finish and helps with washing.
- Place soiled ware in a presoak solution as soon as possible to prevent corrosion; tableware should never remain soiled overnight.
- Avoid aluminum pans which react with the chlorine in presoak compounds and cause discoloration. Chlorine can "stain" even high grade 18/8 stainless steel. Also, avoid presoak compounds intended for silverplate.
- Use only plastic or stainless steel pans and a nonabrasive presoak compound suitable for stainless steel, such as DON Flatware Presoak (1J69). The compound must be fully dissolved before ware is added.
- The maximum recommended presoak time is 15 minutes. Tableware must be removed and presoak solution changed often to prevent buildup of chlorides.
- After presoaking, tableware should immediately be washed in hot water using a nonabrasive, non-corrosive cleaning agent. In warewashing machines, flatware should rest vertically during wash and rinse cycles.
- Low temperature (below 135° F) or chlorine bath systems are not recommended for stainless steel because of potential corrosion. Follow the machine manufacturer's directions carefully.
- After washing, flatware should be thoroughly rinsed in clean, hot water (about 180° F). Articles should then be dried immediately.

Effective 12/20/14, California Prop 65 requires all Vinyl & Synthetic Gloves containing Diisononyl Phthalate (or DINP) to have a "Warning" label on the packaging that reads, "This Product Contains a Chemical Known to Cause Cancer". DON Vinyl and synthetic gloves do not have the "Warning" label on the packaging because they are made from an alternate plasticizer called Dioctyl terephthalate (DOTP).
